

I really fail to see the point of maintaining the Morse Code testing requirement. Most people use a computer to decipher or send code anyway. I've hear people argue that during a power lose, the computer won't work. That isn't true. I can run my computer off a battery just as easy as I can run my radio off a battery. Inverters are cheap and effective. Laptop computers are available everywhere. I don't see a problem. CW won't die, it will probably grow! Thank you for your kind consideration.